

News Release

January 29, 2009

For more information, contact: Jan Dillard/jan.dillard@glenridgegroup.com/404.226.1373

Atlanta, Georgia – Inspired by President Barack Obama’s “call to service,” Glenridge Consulting Group announced today that it is creating a new program that will offer pro bono services to companies with technology project needs.

The new program, Glenridge Project Corps, will match experienced project managers, business analysts, software developers, trainers and technical writers with firms that experience reductions in staff but not project needs. Glenridge hopes that companies taking advantage of the program will be able to complete their project initiatives and ease the burdens of conducting business during the current economic downturn.

“Glenridge is anxious to join President Obama’s call to service to find solutions to the challenges of our current economic downturn,” Glenridge President Jan Dillard said. “We believe that by being creative and willing to participate in new ideas, we can help our community of clients. We will find answers by employing broader, more collaborative initiatives. We are excited to ‘Think Creatively, Act Collaboratively!’”

Glenridge Project Corps will identify technology associates willing to donate hours of service and connect them with technology clients that have business needs but reduced business funds. There will be no fee for services offered through the Glenridge Project Corps program.

Among the many services that will be offered are: building a plan for project implementation, designing presentations, gathering business requirements, and preparing risk mitigation strategies.

---

Glenridge Consulting Contacts:
Media: Jan Dillard (404.226.1373)
Recruiting: Jennifer Wake (770.382.8270)

Companies wishing to take advantage of Glenridge Project Corps are encouraged to contact Senior Recruiter Jennifer Wake (jwake@glenridgegroup.com) for details.

Glenridge Consulting Group is a 100% woman-owned (WBENC certified) provider of technology project improvement services and training. Our clients span the globe, including the United States, India and Africa. Glenridge headquarters are located in Atlanta, Georgia, with additional offices in Virginia Beach, Virginia. For more information about Glenridge Consulting Group please visit www.glenridgegroup.com

---

Glenridge Consulting Contacts:
Media: Jan Dillard (404.226.1373)
Recruiting: Jennifer Wake (770.382.8270)